Detroit, MI - It's not uncommon for toddlers to improvise playing the drums, on just about any available object, but then there's Julian Pavone.

Like many artists, he's a man of few words.

Of course Julian only knows a few words, since he's not yet two-years-old.

However, he's an experienced drummer. The Detroit toddler first picked up a pair of drumsticks when he just three-months-old.

"I said to him, 'maybe I'll put him on my lap while I'm practicing my drums'. I put a headset on him and started practicing with the drum rolls and kicking the base and he's three months old. He reached up for the sticks and I thought, this is unbelievable," says Bernie Pavone, Julian's dad.

A few weeks ago, Julian performed a two-minute drum solo in front of a packed house at an NBA game.

He also recorded a CD, called Go Baby.
